

A Minor Inconvenience

On Monday, Ethel Pringler “launched” her business, Dinklaker Beauty Salon, by smashing a bottle of champagne against the corner of the building. In her excitement, though, she failed to note the “Highly Flammable!” warning label affixed to the bottle. Alas, the label did not lie, and when the bubbly liquid met a random spark from the breaker box, a fire ensued that all too quickly engulfed the building. A determined Ethel, however, opened her salon anyway, and as repairs commenced, her clientele had to endure only a minor inconvenience.
